CASH GONE AS HE SLEPT.

Sometime between 10 o'clock last night and 4 A. M. to-day John Hines's pockets were lightened of $650 in cash, a $116 check and a stop watch which, the wellknown turfman says, cost $300. He was sleeping in the stable looking out for his thoroughbreds with one eye opened, but it was the eye on the wrong side. When he awoke he missed a pillow of green. A hurried but thorough examination satisfied Hines that the thief amination satisfied Hines that the thief got away with all the valuable goods he was in the habit of carrying in his pockets. He notified the police as soon as he could reach a telephone.

"I have my suspicions," said Hines, and the police officers came up to find out what they were. Hines was dreaming of Shorthose in the fifth most of the night.

The clergymen were in a room at he parochial residence near the church when the storm broke. A bolt of light-ning entered the house, and, as it apning entered the house, and, as it appeared later, struck the watch in Father Phelan's coat, which was hanging over the back of the chair on which he was sitting. At the same moment both priests received a shock which caused partial prostration. Later it was found that the works of the watch had been melted. The parochial home was not seriously damaged by the lightning, but the tower of St. Mary's Church was wrecked.
